New Women's Music Program

After a pilot project in July, KRAB's weekly women's music show becomes permanent on Monday at 11pm. Topics for the programs range from "classical" music to jazz to contemporary political songs and the images of women in country and western music. Check the program listings for each week's topic.

Does Capitalism exist as a system that can be defined or is it merely a side effect of the ongoing evolution of human history, a concept which, in view of present economic stagnation and the massive decay in social services, has lost its legitimacy as it faces the challenge of Marxism? A conference held at the Seattle Center last month addressed this question. Tonight, Part I will include speeches by economists Kenneth Boulding and Ernest Mandel, who attempt to define both Capitalism and Communism in terms of present economic conditions. The conclusion of this conference will be aired tomorrow night at 9:00 pm.

11:00 THE PROMISCUOUS DREAMER: 4 x JOHANNES

Regardless of what the '60's taught you, the three B's are not "Burn, Baby, Burn." One of them is Brahms, a master of sloppy overstatement misunderstood in this age of Gallic understatement. But Paul Stanbery hopes you'll appreciate the rigorous classical technician who lurks beneath the opulent Romantic pose as he plays Brahms' four symphonies and analyses of them written by Thomas Scherman and Leonard Bernstein. The cycle's performed by the recently deceased William Steinberg, who conducts the Pittsburgh Symphony, the orchestra he raised to greatness, in this memorial tribute.

Music for Howard Roark (...?...) (Concerti for String Soli by William (not Roberto) Schuman). Music that arches, soars, aspires, and conquers, unafraid of the most radical and challenging sounds -- and perhaps a bit overblown -- like Ayn Rand's archetypal heroine. Paul Stanbery follows his 1976 cycle of Schuman symphonies with the dazzling concerti for Violin, for Cello (called Song of Orpheus), for Viola & Women's Chorus (called Old English Rounds). Other music by Schuman (including the virtually unheard ballets JUDITH and UNDERTOW and music by this exciting composer of epic Americana for every combination from a capella choir to brass band) is accompanied by relatively palatable Objectivist readings.
